Delivery of content associated with a broadcast work

Abstract

A processing system provides works associated with a unified number system (UNS) identifier, and the UNS identifier itself, for broadcast. The system receives a request for content associated with a broadcast work, where the request includes the UNS identifier included in the broadcast. In response to the request, the system obtains the requested content using the UNS identifier included in the request, and delivers the requested content to an end user associated with the end-user device. The type of requested content can be identified based on previously obtained user preferences, so that even if two user-devices send requests including the same UNS identifier, the content provided to each end user or end-user device can be different.

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Notion is a productivity and note-taking application developed by Notion Labs, Inc. It serves as a workspace for notetaking, knowledge management, data organization, and project and task tracking. It was first released in 2016 and is available on the web and as desktop and mobile apps. It is headquartered in San Francisco.

History

Notion Labs, Inc. was created as a startup in San Francisco, California, founded in 2013 by Ivan Zhao, Akshay Kothari, Chris Prucha, Jessica Lam, Simon Last, and Toby Schachman.^[2] It was funded by an initial seed round of around $2 million. The company encountered financial challenges during early development of the app. Notion 1.0 released in August 2016, which was quickly adopted by tech enthusiasts.^[3]

In March 2018, Notion 2.0 was released. At that point, the company had fewer than 10 employees.^[4]

In September 2019, the company announced it had reached 1 million users.^[3]

In January 2020, Notion raised $50 million from Index Ventures and others, valuing the company at $2 billion.^[3] In May of that same year, the company announced that users on its free plan will be able to create unlimited "blocks," where they were previously restricted to 1,000 before needing to pay for premium.^[5]

Workflow questions

Usman Khalid April 16, 2018

Hello world!

I have a couple of workflow questions that I thought I'd put out into the universe here to try and get some help on.

We are in the process of adding an "On Hold" transition to some of our ticket type workflows and had some questions around how we can restrict certain things for this transition. So I wanted to know if some of the below were even possible within Jira.

Can we restrict the ability to make a certain transition in a workflow to specific users or a specific users group?

In turn, can we restrict the transition so that whoever made that transition is the only one allowed to transition it back?

And even further, can we restrict the transition from "On Hold" so that it can ONLY go back to the source status? (e.g if the status went from "In Progress" to "On Hold" then it can only back to "In Progress")

Thank you to whatever beautiful soul tries to answer my questions!

Which objection or use case should we investigate?
